

tralac works to enhance Africa's trade performance

tralac's team of trade lawyers and economists provides analysis of trade issues, training and policy advice to governments and the private sector. We work with the African Union Commission, the African Development Bank and other regional organisations. Much of our work is done in eastern and southern Africa.

tralac provides information on key trade and industrial development issues; how governments can assist firms to participate in global and regional value chains; how trade law impacts business; negotiating and drafting international agreements covering issues such as trade remedies, investment and competition policy as well as product standards to be met when exporting to international markets. Information is available at www.tralac.org.

tralac specialises in trade agreements among African countries, agreements between African countries and trading partners such as the European Union. We also focus on the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) which provides for preferential access to the markets in the United States. The www.agoa.info portal provides all the legislation, as well as the requirements for successful export to the US, indicating which products are eligible and answering company queries.
